Dear Friends,

Welcome to Brigham Young University Theatre Ballet’s Masterworks Series, an evening dedicated to the artistry of legendary choreographers. This year, we proudly present Birthday Variations by Gerald Arpino and Walpurgisnacht Ballet by George Balanchine. Rounding out the performance is Dust to Divine, a contemporary ballet piece by our esteemed faculty member Hilary Wolfley.

The BYU ballet companies are an integral part of the Department of Dance’s academic programs. As such, every performance prioritizes the educational journey of our talented dancers. While the final production brings immense joy to both dancers and directors, it’s the preparation and artistic exploration that offer the most profound rewards. Each piece in this evening's program was carefully chosen with this growth in mind.

Witnessing the dancers’ development in technique, artistry, and professionalism as they embody these roles has been an immense privilege.

Thank you for joining us tonight. We are deeply humbled by the opportunity to rehearse and present these masterworks. This concert is a heartfelt dedication to the alumni, instructors, and directors who have poured their time and energy into building this program. We extend our sincerest gratitude to our dedicated production staff for their tireless efforts in bringing this show to life.

We are particularly grateful for our ongoing partnerships with The Gerald Arpino Foundation and The Balanchine Trust. Both organizations are dedicated to safeguarding the legacies of these choreographic giants and their timeless works. Delve deeper into the lives and legacies of choreographic icons Gerald Arpino and George Balanchine through their captivating biographies found in your program.

Please mark your calendars for our production of The Sleeping Beauty on February 28-March 2, 2024. This enchanting, hour-long production is designed for all ages and showcases the collaboration of artists from diverse disciplines – dance, production, dramaturgy, costume design, and acting. Join us before the show for a magical pre-lobby event featuring some of the enchanting fairies and Aurora’s majestic throne!

We hope you experience the transformative power of dance and artistic expression as you immerse yourselves in this evening of masterpieces.

Diana White, former soloist of the New York City Ballet, is an international teacher, coach and stager of the works of George Balanchine and Jerome Robbins.

Diana started ballet classes at age four in Park Ridge, Illinois. At fourteen, she became the youngest member of the Lyric Opera Ballet of Chicago, directed by the legendary American ballerina, Maria Tallchief. At age sixteen, Diana, was offered a scholarship to the School of American Ballet by Balanchine, himself. He invited her to join the New York City Ballet one year later.

During her twenty career at NYCB, she worked closely with Balanchine and Robbins, performing principal, soloist, and corps de ballet roles in nearly one hundred ballets in the company’s repertory. She toured internationally as a guest artist and appeared several times on public television’s Live From Lincoln Center and Great Performances.

Since her retirement from performing in 1997, Diana has passed on her knowledge to student and professional dancers on six continents. Her most recent stagings were at Houston Ballet, Paris Opera Ballet, National Ballet of China, Boston Ballet, Hong Kong Ballet, and Nashville Ballet.

GERALD ARPINO (1923-2008) stands as a pivotal figure in the development of American ballet. His multifaceted career as dancer, choreographer, and artistic director propelled the Joffrey Ballet from fledgling troupe to world-renowned ensemble, actively reshaping the ballet landscape of the 20th and 21st centuries.

Arpino’s creative versatility extended beyond high-octane athleticism. He explored narrative depths in ballets like “The Clowns” and “Olympics,” the latter grappling with the somber realities of the Vietnam War. This artistic courage, manifested in his willingness to tackle controversial themes, solidified his role as a transformative force in ballet.

As artistic director from 1988, Arpino continued to push boundaries. He championed the talents of emerging choreographers, championed the work of American composers, and in 1993, staged “Billboards,” the world’s first full-length rock ballet. This unwavering commitment to artistic exploration solidified the Joffrey’s reputation as a leading voice in contemporary dance.

Arpino’s legacy transcends his own choreographic output. He fostered a company known for its technical virtuosity, artistic commitment, and unwavering connection to the American spirit. His impact on generations of dancers, choreographers, and audiences resonates in every daring leap, every innovative structure, every electrified moment on the Joffrey stage.

Though the curtain on Arpino’s life drew closed in 2008, his choreographic fingerprints remain vividly etched on the landscape of American ballet, a testament to his unwavering pursuit of artistic innovation and his enduring belief in the boundless potential of human movement.

GEORGE BALANCHINE (1904-1983) stands as a colossus in the history of 20th-century ballet. His profound influence on American dance stemmed from a multifaceted career as choreographer, artistic director, and pedagogue, culminating in the establishment of the New York City Ballet (NYCB), a company synonymous with neoclassical rigor and unparalleled musicality.

Born in St. Petersburg, Balanchine’s early life steeped him in the rigorous traditions of the Imperial Ballet School. This foundation nurtured a deep understanding of musicality and a meticulous approach to form, both cornerstones of his choreographic vocabulary. His early career in Europe found him collaborating with Diaghilev’s Ballets Russes, where he crafted innovative ballets like “Apollo” and “Serenade,” establishing himself as a rising star.

In 1934, Balanchine immigrated to the United States, where he co-founded the School of American Ballet, nurturing a generation of dancers trained in his exacting yet liberating technique. This pedagogical foundation provided fertile ground for the establishment of the NYCB in 1948, a company built on the principles of technical purity, musical precision, and a distinctly American aesthetic.

Balanchine’s choreographic output was prolific and diverse. He crafted masterfully constructed ballets like “Symphony in C” and “Agon,” where intricate movement mirrored the complexities of symphonic structures. Other works, such as “Serenade” and “Western Symphony,” showcased his playful engagement with American themes and vernacular movement. His collaborations with composers like Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky resulted in landmark ballets that continue to define the repertoire of major companies worldwide.

As artistic director of the NYCB for over 35 years, Balanchine remained an unrelenting innovator. He challenged traditional narratives, experimented with unconventional casting, and championed the work of contemporary composers. His influence extended beyond the NYCB, shaping the curriculum of ballet schools and influencing choreographers globally.

Balanchine’s legacy is multifaceted. He revitalized the language of ballet, prioritizing musicality and precision over narrative flourish. He nurtured a generation of American dancers and choreographers, solidifying the country’s place as a major force in the ballet world. His vision and unwavering commitment to artistic excellence continue to inspire dancers and audiences alike, ensuring his place as a titan of 20th-century ballet.
